32nd Annual Palliative
Education & Research Day

Monday | October 25, 2021

*My Grief - Your Grief – Our Grief
Grieving Together in Times of Loss*

Caring for those at the end of life is both challenging and rewarding work

Join us as we explore what it means to be caregivers – both professionally and personally - and how we can approach this willing task, not only for the health and wellbeing of those we care for, but for ourselves.

We invite you to submit abstracts for oral and poster presentations related to Palliative & End of Life Care

DEADLINE: 30 April 2021

Grief is a response to our many losses – losses arising from deaths of significant people in our lives, as well as other important life transitions, including losses of opportunities, relationships, employment, and social connections.

Grief is a unique experience that affects many dimensions of a person's life – emotionally, socially, spiritually, and physically. There is no one way to grieve.

However, grief is also a universal experience. During this past year of the COVID-19 pandemic, we have all experienced significant losses. There are many ways to connect our personal grief experiences with the grief experiences of others - within our relationships, our work settings, and our communities. There is so much that we can learn from each other.

We hope that you will take the opportunity to attend in October and get involved in discussions about diverse grief experiences and learnings across a range of topics, during keynote presentations and breakout sessions.
